FPA
FINANCIAL PLANNING ASSOCIATION

We recently became aware of an issue affecting continuing education (CE) credit that we wanted to bring to your attention since you recently participated in a CE-eligible program from FPA National. The CFP Board has alerted us that they are working to quickly remedy a problem with their attendance reporting process for programs conducted in November and December 2010 which may have resulted in credits not being appropriately applied to participants' records. This issue specifically affects some FPA National-sponsored programs and could affect other organizations' courses during the same time period. Per the CFP Board, it is not an issue with FPA Chapter-submitted credits

Based on our research, affected FPA National programs may include, but are not limited to:

- Journal of Financial Planning self-study exams;
- VLC live and archive sessions;
- In a Box programs; and
- Some sessions from FPA Denver 2010 including pre-cons, the closing general session on Oct. 11, and three VLCs conducted on-site.

FPA is committed to ensuring that anyone who is owed CE credit for participation in our programs will receive this credit. This issue only affects programs where the host organization – in this case, FPA National – reports the credits to the CFP Board directly on your behalf. If you are concerned about getting credits applied before the end of the month, you should self-report your credits. Information on self-reporting is available from the CFP Board website via the following link: www.cfp.net/certificants/ce.asp#8 or by calling the CFP Board's Stakeholder Services staff at 800-487-1497.

This problem did not affect every CE submission and your credits may have been appropriately applied. However, because you may have been affected, we strongly suggest that you verify your credits directly with the CFP Board by contacting them at 800-487-1497.
